A New General Catalogue of the Ants of the World

Introduction

Taxonomy is a fascinating branch of biology, unique in that it must always be retrospective as well as prospective. This is because a taxonomic decision taken today projects forward in time and colours the decisions and opinions of taxonomists in the future. Similarly, any taxonomic decision taken since the inception of zoological nomenclature, in 1758, has relevance today, and on into the future. And it does not matter whether that decision was right or wrong; whatever its ultimate origin or fate, a taxonomic decision is a persistent fact that must be taken into account. I suppose that a quaint way of expressing this would be: a name is forever, or at least for as long as the science of taxonomy continues.

Thus any taxonomist working today must have available all the relevant decisions taken in the past, so that they can be assessed, so that errors and misinterpretations can be avoided, and so that correct decisions and opinions can be transmitted to the future. A useful way of collating all these past actions is to gather the references to all the taxonomic decisions taken in a given group and put them together in such a way that the relevant data can easily be found and extracted. This is a prime function of a catalogue, to show at a glance the condition and state of any previous taxonomic decision.

History of ant catalogues

This volume is the first attempt to catalogue all the ants of the world, including the fossil forms, since 1893. Between that date and the present there have appeared a number of regional lists and catalogues dealing with larger or smaller areas, and one enormous work, the Genera Insectorum, that catalogued all the world's insect fauna except for the fossil taxa. Volumes in the Genera Insectorum series that deal with ants were published between 1910 and 1925. The series presented both a catalogue and a classification and in consequence was extremely valuable. A great deal has happened in myrmecology since 1925, however, and the series is outdated for modern needs. In particular, the classification offered there is now virtually useless, and taxonomic changes and additions have carried on apace since the appearance of the final volume.

The concept of a world catalogue of all names in the family commenced with Roger (1863b) and Mayr (1863), both of whom produced extremely valuable but now mostly forgotten works. Not only did they enumerate the taxa then known, but they also introduced many synonymies which accounted for numerous old and dubious names and dispersed lots of names from the old form-genera into the genus-rank taxa that we still recognise today. They were followed by Dalla Torre (1893), whose treatment of extinct as well as extant taxa added a dimension that unfortunately was not continued. Later world cataloguers tended to stick with either the fossil fauna (Handlirsch, 1906, 1907) or the extant fauna (Emery, 1910b, 1911d, 1912g, 1921f, 1922e, 1922f, 1925b; the Genera Insectorum series).

After these dates cataloguers specialised in regional surveys. Some of these dealt with entire zoogeographical regions, for instance Kempf (1972a) and Brando (1991) [Neotropical]; Smith, M.R. (1951a, 1958c) and Smith, D.R. (1979) [Nearctic]; Chapman & Capco (1951) [Oriental and Indo-Australian]; Wheeler, W.M. (1922a) [Afrotropical and Malagasy]; Taylor (1987a, 1987b) [Australasian]; Wheeler, W.M. (1935i) [Oceanian]. Mostly however they dealt only with single countries, for example Bruch (1914, 1915) [Argentina]; Borgmeier (1923, 1927c) [Brazil]; Taylor & Brown, D.R. (1985) [Australia]; Wheeler, W.M. (1930h) and Wu, C.F. (1941) [China]; Baltazar (1966) [Philippines]; Baroni Urbani (1971c) [Italy]; Ceballos (1956) [Spain]; Pisarski (1975) [Poland]; Onoyama (1980) [Japan]. More recently Shattuck (1994) has attempted to break away from this regional technique by producing a catalogue based on subfamily-rank taxa (Aneuretinae and Doli-choderinae) on a worldwide basis.

Among the fossils, lists of forms in amber have attracted some attention, with contributions by Burnham (1979), Keilbach (1982) and Spahr (1987). Fossils in rock have to a large extent been ignored, though Carpenter (1992) provides a review of fossil genera. Whole fossil faunas have of course been treated in monographs by myrmecologists or palaeoentomologists, for example Emery (1891a), Wheeler, W.M. (1915h), Carpenter (1930), Théobald (1937b), Dlussky (1967b, 1975, 1981b, 1988), but these are mostly descriptive and are not cross-referred to other faunas. Considering that the ants have one of the best fossil records of any insect family, a modern worldwide review of the extinct ant taxa is long overdue.

The drift away from world to more limited regional catalogues was, I suspect, inspired mostly by strictures of time, availability of literature, and availability of financial support, though to a lesser extent a deficiency of imagination may also have played a part. Regional catalogues and lists have their advantages, but they also generate problems. Chief among the drawbacks is the tendency to produce and maintain homonymies and to overlook synonymies among those researchers who consult only the literature concerning the country or region in question and who ignore the extralimital possibilities.

In this new general catalogue I have attempted to examine every publication on ant taxonomy and related fields of study from 1758 to the present. The result is what you see here. This catalogue covers the entire family Formicidae, which currently contains the following numbers of valid extant taxa: 16 subfamilies, 296 genera, and 9,536 species (up to 31 December 1993). Among the extant forms there are also an uncounted number of subspecies, along with a very large number of junior synonyms, junior homonyms, and unavailable names. In addition to the living taxa, the family's impressive fossil record yields a further 408 species. These are distributed through 13 subfamilies, of which 9 are currently extant and 4 are wholly extinct, and 118 genera, of which 73 are totally extinct.

History of ant classification and phylogeny

The compilation of a catalogue such as this relies heavily upon a reasonable classificatory framework for the group in question. As in many insect groups the classification of the Formicidae is in a state of flux, with the older classification being gradually updated and improved by the application of cladistic theories and methodologies. This means that parts of the classification within the family are more advanced than others, resulting in a variability which cannot be helped but which must be borne in mind by the reader.

The ant classification that we see today is the culmination of over a century of accumulated effort. Early authors such as Nylander (1846a, 1846b, 1849), Smith, F. (1858), Mayr (1861, 1863) and Roger (1863b) were concerned with the accumulation of named taxa at genus and species rank and did not show much interest in arranging these into a formal classification. The second generation of ant taxonomists, besides adding vast numbers of names to the rapidly growing list, began to attempt the arrangement of the names into a standard classification. The first moves toward what eventually developed into today's system were made by Emery (1877a, 1895j, 1896e, 1901a, 1914a, 1915i) and Forel (1878, 1893a). These were followed by the Genera Insectorum series of Emery (1910b, 1911d, 1912g, 1921f, 1922e, 1922f, 1925b), whose results were very closely followed by Wheeler, W.M. (1920, 1922a).

By 1925 a rough consensus had been reached, which has since been called the Emery-Wheeler classification (Brown, 1958g). This was extremely authoritative, as both authors also presented identification keys to the world's genera and higher taxa. So great was the influence of the Emery-Wheeler classification that study of the subject fell into abeyance for many years. Authors seemed content to cram any newly discovered taxon into the existing system, even when it was glaringly obvious that the classification had outlived its usefulness.

During the 1950s the flaws in the Emery-Wheeler system reached a critical point; the cracks could not be patched up or painted over any longer, and it began to fall apart. Two idiosyncratic classifications of ant subfamilies, proposed by Clark (1951) and Bernard (1951), were quickly followed by a new look at the topic by Brown (1954e). He proposed a radical change in the approach to ant classification and his paper forms the baseline for modern research into both the classification and the phylogeny of ants. In terms of classification these include the synopses by Brown (1973b), Snelling (1981), Wheeler, G.C. & Wheeler, J. (1985), Dlussky & Fedoseeva (1987), Hölldobler & Wilson (1990), and Bolton (1994).

The study of ant phylogeny, or at least an attempt to account for the origins of the various ant subfamilies, dates back to Wheeler, W.M. (1920), but the field did not advance much until Brown's (1954e) paper. A short history of modern works on ant phylogeny, which reflects the growing influence of cladistic methodology, is given by Bolton (1990c). Critical works that detail the progress of ant phylogenetic studies in recent years include Taylor (1978a), Dlussky & Fedoseeva (1987), Baroni Urbani (1989), Bolton (1990a, 1990b, 1990c), Ward (1990), Baroni Urbani, Bolton & Ward (1992), Shattuck (1992b), and Lattke (1994).

General references and faunal surveys

The eusocial organisation of ants and their enormously diverse biologies have, in recent years, inspired a large number of books offering a synthesis of ant biology and behavior. Recommended books for anyone interested in ants in general, or in more specialised aspects of their biology, include the following and their included references: Beattie (1985), Blum (1984), Bolton (1994), Dlussky (1981a), Dumpert (1978), Gösswald (1985), Hermann (1979–1982, 1984), Hölldobler & Wilson (1990), Jolivet (1986, 1992), Passera (1984), Schneirla (1971), Sudd (1967), Sudd & Franks (1987), Wilson (1971).

Along with these general volumes, the period 1950–1994 has seen the appearance of a number of surveys of local ant faunas that include keys for the identification of species within the country or territory in question. Faunal surveys that antedate 1950 are not recommended, as their keys are clogged with unavailable names and infraspecific taxa and are of very limited use by modern standards. The following list indicates territories for which faunal surveys have been produced in the period 1950–1994, but references to earlier surveys and their contents, and to works dealing with individual taxa rather than geographical areas, are of course included within the corpus of the catalogue.

Use of the catalogue

The catalogue is divided into three sections. The first deals with family-group (suprageneric) taxa: names applied to taxa with the rank of family, subfamily, tribe, or subtribe. The second deals with taxa in the genus-group: names applied to taxa with the rank of genus or subgenus. The third, and by far the largest, section deals with species-group taxa: names with the rank of species or subspecies.

Each section has its own introductory paragraphs, explaining layout, typography, special considerations, and so on. Within each section names are listed in alphabetical order, regardless of their current status, and are cross-referred to other names where necessary. Thus every subfamily within the catalogue of family-group names has a list of component tribes appended; all names of tribes that are currently valid include a list of component genera; all species with infraspecific taxa contain lists of their subspecies. Cross-referencing also works in the reverse direction, as the entry for any subspecies will provide an indication of the species to which it is appended, which in turn is included under a genus heading, which itself is referable back to the catalogue of genus-group names and to the catalogue of family-group names. Similarly, the provenance of junior and senior synonyms and homonyms can be traced to and from within the catalogue.

Every entry strives to provide a taxonomic history of the name in question, and to provide additional references which supplement our understanding of the taxon. All changes of combination and status are recorded for each name, as are indications of synonymy and homonymy.

Two terms commonly encountered in the catalogue need, I think, a few words of explanation, as they have been widely ignored or misunderstood in the taxonomic literature dealing with ants.

1. Combination. The association of a genus-rank name and a species-rank name to form the name of a species is a combination. Similarly, the association of genus-rank name plus species-rank name plus subspecies-rank name forms a combination. A new combination occurs only when a previously published name in the species-group is first appended to a generic name other than the one it accompanied in its original description. A revived combination describes the state in which a species-group name is transferred back to a generic name from which, at some previous time, it had been excluded.

2. Status. A change of rank within a trinomen or a quadrinomen, (such as the elevation of a subgenus to genus rank, or of a subspecies to species rank; or vice versa, the demotion of a genus to subgenus rank or species to subspecies rank) is indicated by new status. A reversion in rank to one previously held, from one later designated, is a revived status.

The concepts and usages of combination and status are quite different and distinct. They should not be confused, although sadly they frequently are.

Three other concepts fundamental to an understanding of nomenclature, namely synonymy, homonymy and availability of names, have accrued a finely tuned series of regulations governing their use. The concepts and their applications are fully explained in the International Code of Zoological Nomenclature (Third Edition, 1985) and are applied throughout this catalogue. Their correct usage should be understood and adhered to by all taxonomists.

One common misuse of the term synonymy needs to be explained here. A secondary reference to a taxon, that directs material purportedly of that taxon to a different and senior taxon, is a misidentification, not a synonymy. For example, an entry in an imaginary taxonomic synopsis such as

X-us y-us Black, 1928: 4.

X-us z-us White; Green, 1930: 15, new synonymy.

is an incorrect and ignorant usage of the concept of synonymy. This entry should properly read:

X-us y-us Black, 1928: 4.

X-us z-us White, sensu (or "in the sense of") Green, 1930: 15, misidentification.

Synonymy in this instance applies only if the type-material of two (or more) taxa in the species-group has been compared and judged to be conspecific. Thus, in our imaginary example, if type-specimens of y-us and z-us had been compared and judged to be conspecific, the entry in the taxonomic synopsis would then indicate the material and nominate synonymy.

X-us y-us Black, 1928: 4. Holotype worker [examined].

X-us z-us White, 1930: 1. Holotype worker [examined], new synonymy.

Checklist of Fossil Taxa

Throughout the catalogue the names of all fossil taxa are prefixed by the symbol *. Because the number of names applied to fossil forms is relatively small, their entries remain inconspicuous within the corpus of the catalogue. The following checklist has therefore been abstracted to allow those workers primarily interested in the fossil forms to gain rapid access to the taxa in question. The list here provides only the names of the taxa. Their individual entries and data relating to them are given in full in the catalogue proper.

Catalogue of Family-Group (Suprageneric) Taxa

Layout of the catalogue

In the alphabetically arranged list of family-group taxa below, each name is immediately followed by parentheses giving information on the current status of the name. Subsequent entries list references for the following:

- i. The original description, designation, or nomination of the taxon, and its type-genus.
- ii. In date order, any changes of spelling, rank-denoting suffix, stem, or assignment; as well as changes modifying the original content of the taxon.
- iii. Revisions or reviews of the taxon.
- iv. Junior or senior synonyms of the taxon.
- v. List of valid lower-ranking taxa currently included within the higher-ranking taxon.
- vi. Notes.

All family-group taxa are listed in alphabetical order regardless of their current status. Statements of synonymy are repeated under both junior and senior names, but junior synonyms appear in the form given at their inception. Taxonomically unavailable names are stated as such and are followed by a note explaining their provenance and dispersal. Names currently considered valid are in BOLD CAPITALS, all other names are in CAPITALS.

The symbol * preceding a name at any rank indicates that the taxon is known only from the fossil record.

No attempt has been made to record every occurrence of a name throughout the entire ant literature. Only references conveying new, modified, or synoptic information are given.

The appearance of simple misspellings caused by obvious typographical errors in the names has been ignored in the catalogue, except when it affects the nomenclature. For example, in Dlussky & Fedoseeva (1987: 78), Apomyrmini appears as Aromyrmini. As the only included genus is stated correctly as Apomyrma, such a minor error is unlikely to cause confusion. However, when a misspelling is so gross that it may tend to confuse, it is included in the catalogue; for example Myrmorhynchini for Myrmecorhynchini. The object of this survey is to present a concise and useful catalogue, not a long list of all the typographical errors ever perpetrated in the Formicidae.

Application of the Code to family-group taxa

The provisions of the International Code of Zoological Nomenclature (Third Edition, 1985) have in the past been much neglected as regards their application to names in the family-group; they are implemented in this catalogue. It is not practical to repeat all the rules and provisions here, but some basic principles, particularly those which affect entries in this catalogue, should be clarified.

1. Names proposed in the family-group (suprageneric taxa) must be based upon the name-stem of an available genus rank taxon; otherwise they are taxonomically unavailable. For example, Formicidae, formed from the genus rank name Formica; Cerapachyinae, formed from the genus rank name Cerapachys; and Brachymyrmecini, formed from the genus rank name Brachymyrmex, are all available. On the other hand, names such as Euformicinae, Rhagiomyrmicinae, and Taraxoponerinae are unavailable, as they are not based on a genus-rank name.

2. Standard suffixes indicating the rank of a suprageneric taxon are as follows:

- idae for taxa of family rank,
- inae for taxa of subfamily rank,
- ini for taxa of tribe rank.

A formal suffix to indicate subtribal rank has never been standardised, though -ina is much used elsewhere in the Hymenoptera. Brown (1957i: 193) has suggested -iti, but this does not appear to have gained wide recognition or support. As a personal, subjective, opinion I can see no obvious advantage to the use of subtribes. They merely interpose another formal taxonomic rank of very marginal value; their place should perhaps be taken by informal groups of genera which, however closely they are defined, do not add an additional stratum to the formal nomenclature.

Note that before about 1895 there was no general agreement on suffixes determining a particular rank. Thus, before that date -idae, for example, may be applied to suprageneric taxa below the rank of family.

3. A change of suffix in an available family-group name, indicating a change of rank, does not initiate any alteration of the name of the author, nor does it require a change of date, nor is the author's name placed in parentheses or in any other way modified. Irrespective of the suffix, the name is always attributed to the author who first used it as an available name in the family-group, and with that date of publication.

4. The law of priority is applicable to suprageneric taxa. The valid name of a taxon is the oldest available name applied to it. For example, the name Leptothoracini Emery (1914a: 38) is antedated by Formicoxenini Forel (1893a: 164). Emery (1914a: 42) himself included the type-genus of Formicoxenini (Formicoxenus) in his tribe Leptothoracini. No subsequent author has questioned the fact that Formicoxenus and Leptothorax (the type-genus of Leptothoracini) belong in the same tribe; nor is it questioned here. Hence the better-known name Leptothoracini falls as a junior synonym of Formicoxenini.

5. The principle of homonymy is applicable to suprageneric taxa. For example Monomoriini Wheeler, W.M. 1915h: 45 is a junior homonym (and also a junior synonym) of Monomoriini Emery, 1914a: 41.

History of synoptic classifications

The purpose of a synoptic classification is to present the reader with a systematic overview which shows at a glance the author's opinion of the worldwide classification of a particular group. Such synopses have a long history in the Formicidae and are divisible into two main categories: first, those with reasons given for the classification, either stated or implied by reference to earlier studies; and second, those taking the form of a simple list, without justification or argument for the system outlined.

In the main, later synopses were built upon, and relied heavily on, earlier studies. The first authors to come to grips with an overall classification of ants, in a recognisably modern system, were Forel (1893a) and Emery (1895j, 1896e), although these dated back to preliminary surveys by Emery (1877a) and Forel (1878). Further additions to the fledgling system thus produced were made by Emery (1901a, 1914a, 1915i). These culminated in his contributions to the remarkable Genera Insectorum volumes (Emery, 1910b, 1911d, 1912g, 1921f, 1922e, 1922f, 1925b), which offered both classification and catalogue. Other notable synopses made in the first quarter of the twentieth century included those of Forel (1917), Wheeler, W.M. (1922a), and the rather idiosyncratic classification of Ashmead (1905b). These publications account for the majority of subfamily and tribe names still in use in the Formicidae. Most of these contributions fall into the first category outlined above, but the works of Ashmead (1905b) and Forel (1917) fall into the second.

After 1925 the appeal of synoptic classifications appears to have waned, although a few regional synopses have been produced, for example by Kempf (1972a) at the end of his Neotropical catalogue. Fresh interest was kindled by Brown's (1973b) synoptic list of subfamilies and genera, and in recent years there has been a small deluge of synopses, all of which fall into the second category mentioned above. These include the works of Snelling (1981), Wheeler, G.C. & Wheeler, J. (1985), Dlussky & Fedoseeva (1987), Hölldobler & Wilson (1990), and Bolton (1994). For the most part these give a useful overview, but unfortunately the "simplified conspectus of Formicidae" produced by Wheeler, G.C. & Wheeler, J. (1985) is retrograde. Errors of omission and commission abound and the list is untrustworthy and not recommended.

Note on tribe-rank classification

In subfamilies of Formicidae such as Cerapachyinae and Ecitoninae, and to a large extent Ponerinae, the tribe-rank classification is more or less accurate and reflects, to a reasonable extent, an acceptable classification at our current state of knowledge. The same could not be said of the subfamilies Formicinae and Myrmicinae. In these the tribe-rank classification is ancient, decrepit, largely speculative, and in dire need of serious modern analysis. The tribes of Formicinae listed here largely follow, with minor modifications, the classical systems of Wheeler, W.M. (1922a) and Emery (1925b), which, despite all their shortcomings, we must still use. The tribes of Myrmicinae, as presented here, reflect my current opinions, for what they are worth, but these should not be considered definite or final by any means.

Catalogue of Genus-Group Taxa

Layout of the catalogue

The provisions of the International Code of Zoological Nomenclature (Third Edition, 1985) are applied throughout this alphabetically arranged catalogue. Each name is immediately followed by information in parentheses on the current status of, or the subfamily and tribal placement of, the taxon in question. The notes on the current status, including junior synonyms, junior homonyms, subgeneric names, etc., provide a cross-reference within the catalogue of genus-group taxa. Inclusion of subfamily and tribal names, along with the currently valid genus-rank taxa, allows the name to be referred back to the catalogue of family-group taxa. Subsequent entries list references for the following, not all of which, after the second, may be applicable to any single name:

- i. The original description, designation, or nomination of the taxon.
- ii. The type-species of the taxon, together with synonymic or homonymic data concerning the type-species, where appropriate.
- iii. Changes in rank of the taxon, in date order.
- iv. Homonymy, or senior or junior synonymy, of the taxon.
- v. References to any revision, review, or key concerning the taxon.
- vi. List of lower-ranking taxa currently included within a higher-ranking taxon, in alphabetical order and with synonyms and homonyms indicated.

References to synonymies are repeated under both senior and junior names, as these may be widely separated in the catalogue. The earliest reference to a synonymy is always given. Where further references are included they present additional information, confirmation, or other data. Similarly, full data on junior homonyms are given, together with directions to the appropriate replacement names, where some of the information may be repeated. Nomina nuda and other taxonomically unavailable names are indicated as such and are followed by references or notes explaining their provenance and dispersal, where the latter is feasible.

Serious misspellings are entered in the catalogue in square brackets, and a note under the correctly spelled entry directs the reader's attention toward the misspelling. Simple typographical errors, which are unlikely to cause confusion, have usually been ignored, but some commonly perpetrated errors are included. Misspellings and deliberate emendations of spellings are differentiated. In general, any secondary spelling that is at variance with the original is treated as a misspelling unless its author has given a definite indication that an emendation in spelling is intended. Such emendations are regarded as justified or unjustified, according to the evidence of each case.

As in the catalogue of family-group names, no attempt has been made to record every occurrence of a name throughout the entire ant literature. Such a process would amass vast lists and enormous numbers of references, the majority of which would not convey any new information. The principal aim here is to provide a concise, useful, and accurate guide, rather than an exhaustive but mostly sterile list. Therefore, references initiating new taxa, synonymy, homonymy, etc., are all presented, but following these only references conveying new, additional, modified, or synoptic information are recorded.

References to reviews, revisions, and keys pertaining to whole genera or recognised subdivisions of genera throughout their known range, and studies of genus-group names applied to an entire zoogeographical region, are included. References to keys for small areas, for instance to a single genus in a single European country, are not normally given, but exceptions are made where such studies include radical new information or where a large genus has only been studied in a limited area. For a list of faunal studies the reader is referred to the introduction.

In general only relatively recent keys (post-1950) have been included as references. This is mainly because earlier keys laboured under the weird and worthless pentanomial system of ant nomenclature and are, by modern standards, clogged with unavailable infraspecific names. If early keys retain some value they have been included but are followed by the statement "out of date" where necessary.

The symbol * preceding a name indicates that the taxon is known only from the fossil record. At the initial entry for each genus-group name the following typography is used:

- i. BOLD ITALIC CAPITALS indicate a currently valid name of genus or subgenus rank. To distinguish the two, all names currently accepted at the rank of subgenus are preceded by the symbol #.

- ii. ITALIC CAPITALS indicate all other names in the genus-group, including junior synonyms, junior homonyms, nomina nuda, unavailable names, ichnotaxa, misspellings and unjustified emendations.

Recent world lists of genera

Brown (1973b) published a list of world genera indicating all the names that he considered to be synonyms. He stressed, however, that these synonymies were provisional, termed them “projected synonymies,” and accepted that some would be rejected when detailed analysis was carried out. In the present catalogue these proposals of Brown’s are listed as “provisional junior synonym” where each occurs. When further work has either confirmed or rejected the provisional synonymy, the reference for that study is given. Where no additional information has accrued, the Brown entry is followed by the note “(unconfirmed).”

Later lists of genera, produced by Snelling (1981) and Hölldobler & Wilson (1990), used the Brown (1973b) paper as their template, with one important difference: the provisional synonyms of Brown are rendered as definite in both these publications, though none of the synonymies is claimed as new in either list. Both these lists are to a large extent ignored here, being noted only when they present information which is new or radically at variance with the Brown list.

The main result of this action is to deny the synonymy of subgenera in a number of speciose genera, such as Camponotus and Polyrhachis. Whilst feeling sure that Brown’s provisional synonymies will in most cases prove to be justified, I consider that confirmation of synonymy should rest upon analysis or definitive statement, rather than merely upon inclusion in a later list.

The treatment of genus-group synonymies included in post-1973 catalogues (e.g. Smith, D.R. (1979); Taylor & Brown, D.R. (1985)), as opposed to simple lists, is at variance to the above. Synonymies recorded in catalogues are regarded here as confirming or denying the validity of Brown’s (1973b) provisional synonyms. Such a decision may seem arbitrary but it is necessary, as catalogues present much more and more detailed information than lists do, which amounts to the making of a definitive statement. For example, Taylor & Brown, D.R. (1985) are considered to have confirmed the synonymy of Dacryon with Podomyrma by including all the species-group taxa originally assigned to the former under the latter name. Smith, D.R. (1979) accepts Brown’s synonymy of the subgenera of Pheidole by listing all taxa under one heading, but denies the synonymy of the subgenera of Camponotus and Lasius by cataloguing each subgenus and its contents separately.

Finally, a word must be said about the treatment of genera in the idiosyncratic and very unsatisfactory list given by Wheeler, G.C. & Wheeler, J. (1985). This appears to have been written without regard for, or perhaps in ignorance of, most preceding revisionary studies, although it is quoted as being “up to date according to our views.” In the list large numbers of genera are resurrected from synonymy, apparently at whim. Others are returned to tribes from which they had expressly been excluded by earlier revisors, and still others are given as “incertae sedis” when their taxonomic position has previously been worked out. The number of such unjustified emendations, especially in the Myrmicinae, is regrettably large. In view of all these anomalies and anachronisms, I have chosen to omit this publication from reference in the generic catalogue which follows, whilst drawing attention to its existence here.

Catalogue of Species-Group Taxa

Names in the genus-group

Names in the genus-group are listed in alphabetical order throughout, whatever their current status. For data on genus-group names, refer to the catalogue of genus-group taxa. Typography of genus-group names used here is as follows:

1. Genus-group names which are currently regarded as valid genera are listed in BOLD ITALIC CAPITALS and are followed by parentheses indicating the global distribution of each. Valid names of subgenus rank are prefixed by the symbol #. Species-group names contained within each genus follow immediately in alphabetical order; see notes below.

2. Genus-group names which are junior synonyms, junior homonyms, or any other category are listed in ITALIC CAPITALS and are followed by : "see under —," plus the name in BOLD ITALIC CAPITALS of the currently valid genus where their included species-group names can be found. For example, the entry for Triglyphothrix, a junior synonym of Tetramorium, reads "TRIGLYPHOTHRIX: see under TETRAMORIUM," indicating that taxa originally described under the former name can be found under the latter.

Names in the species-group

Every published name in the species-group, regardless of its rank and status, has its own entry and is cross-referred within the catalogue where necessary. As in previous sections serious misspellings of names, which may cause confusion, are listed, but simple and obvious typographical errors are omitted. The object of this catalogue is to be functional and useful, not to provide an inflated list of typographical errors for ant names. The following notes indicate the standardised system used throughout the catalogue.

1. Taxa within each currently recognised genus are listed alphabetically, regardless of their current status. Fossil forms are preceded by *. The incorrect appearance of diacritical marks, hyphens, capital letters, etc., in original descriptions of species-group names are corrected here in accordance with the rules of the International Code of Zoological No- menclature (Third Edition, 1985), regardless of how the name first appeared in print.

2. Names with the current rank of species or subspecies are in bold italic lower case; the two are distinguished by the symbol #, which precedes all current subspecies-rank names. All other entries (junior synonyms, junior homonyms, unavailable names, etc.) are in italic lower case; see note 5, below.

3. Each name entered is immediately followed by its full original combination together with name(s) of author(s), bibliographical reference, sex or caste of material included in the original description (abbreviated in parentheses), and the name of the territory containing the type-locality (in CAPITALS).

Abbreviations denoting material mentioned in descriptions are as follows: (s.) = soldier caste or major worker, when appropriate; (w.) = worker; (q.) = queen; (m.) = male; (l.) = larva; (k.) = karyotype.

Details of type-locality are omitted, primarily because they can be obtained by reference to the original publication, and secondarily to economise on space.

4. Immediately following the basic data outlined above is the following supplementary information, when available:

- i. References to later descriptions of sexes, castes, etc., not covered by the original description.
- ii. References to changes in genus-group combination of the species-group name, introduced by "Combination in: —."
- iii. References to changes in rank of the species-group name.
- iv. References to synonymy and/or homonymy of the species-group name, whether junior or senior.
- v. References to other literature for consultation, introduced by "See also: —."
- vi. List of subspecies-rank names currently attached to a species-rank name, introduced by "Current subspecies: nominal plus —," and followed by a list of their names which can be referred to under their individual headings.
- vii. A name originally described in one genus but subsequently transferred to another, either because the original combination was incorrect or because of genus-level synonymy, is listed under its original combination but is followed by "; see under —." This is followed by the currently recognised genus-level combination where full information may be found. For example in Acromyrmex the entry for tucumana reads: “tucumana Forel, 1914; see under TRACHYMYRMEX.”

Where a name was originally described in a genus now synonymised but later transferred elsewhere, the genus of the original combination is quoted in square brackets. Thus in Atta the entry for malabarica reads: “malabarica Jerdon, 1851 [Oecodoma]; see under PHEIDOLE.” This shows that the original combination was in Oecodoma, that the genus Oecodoma is now recognised as a junior synonym of Atta, but that the particular species O. malabarica should be sought under Pheidole.

In species whose names occur many times in the literature only critical references in categories ii–iv are recorded. The reason for this is that a complete list would be very repetitive and to a large extent sterile and uninformative. For example, a common name treated as a subspecies by one author throughout his life, but as a species by another, would show dozens of pointless entries in category iii. Similarly, frequent alternations of generic combination would produce a plethora of information-free entries in category ii.

- viii. Some entries in categories i–iv above may show numerous references in certain taxa. In such cases the first reference is always the earliest to any particular event. Later references indicate confirmation or continuity of the decision indicated by the earliest reference.

5. All names other than those currently valid at species rank or subspecies rank are in italic lower case.

- i. Old terms for ranks treated here as available names with the rank of subspecies (subsp.) include stirps (st.), race (r.), and variety (var.); the last only when applied directly to a name of species rank in an original description. The terms used in the original descriptions are reproduced in the catalogue, and their equivalence to subspecies must be borne in mind.

Although subspecies are listed in the catalogue, the reader should be aware that I am categorically opposed to the use of this taxonomic rank. Such names appear here only because time is not available to ascertain their real value. The uselessness of the subspecies rank was demonstrated by Wilson & Brown (1953: 97), and most serious myrmecologists immediately accepted the logic of their argument. Unfortunately the taxonomic literature remains clogged with the infraspecific descriptive excesses of earlier authors, and even a few recent authors adhere to the sorry practice of creating subspecies.

- ii. Variety names appended to any name of subspecies rank are infrasubspecific and hence taxonomically unavailable, unless made available by action of some later author. In such instances the name becomes available under the authorship and date of the later author, in accordance with the ICZN rules. Such names are entered in the catalogue under their first available usage; the reference to the unavailable original then follows the first available use in square brackets.

Permanently unavailable names are stated as such. Where an earlier author has referred an unavailable name to the synonymy of an available name, an incorrect procedure as unavailable names have no status, the phrase “Unavailable name; material referred to —,” followed by available name plus reference(s), is utilised.

References to unavailable names, other than their original appearances, are ignored. Similarly, references to originally available names in an unavailable subsequent context, are ignored. For instance, the imaginary taxon X-us x-us subsp. y-us is available. A later reference in the unavailable form X-us x-us subsp. z-us var. y-us is ignored.

6. Newly detected junior homonyms in the species-group, primary or secondary, are treated in one of several ways.

- i. In genera whose species-level taxonomy is comprehensively understood, or which have been recently revised, replacement names for newly detected junior homonyms at species rank are proposed.
- ii. Junior homonyms at species rank in genera whose species-level taxonomy is not well understood are replaced only if there is minimal chance of later synonymy of the junior homonym and its replacement name, and only if the species in question has no complement of infraspecific taxa. If infraspecific taxa are present, revisionary work may show one of these to be available as a replacement name, which would make redundant any new name proposed here. Conversely, if subsequent taxonomic studies remove the infraspecific taxa from association with the species in question, proposal of a replacement name will become necessary at that time.
- iii. Replacement names are not proposed for junior homonyms currently of infraspecific rank. Most infraspecific taxa turn out to be junior synonyms for which, if homonymous, replacement names are unnecessary (see iv, below). If on revision any homonymous infraspecific name is raised to the rank of species, then a replacement name can be proposed at that time.
- iv. Replacement names are not proposed for junior homonyms that are currently also junior synonyms. If the name is later revived from synonymy, then a replacement name can be proposed at that time.
- v. Replacement names are not proposed for junior homonyms in genera where I know that other workers are currently carrying out taxonomic studies.
- vi. Replacement names are not proposed for junior homonyms that are unidentifiable to genus and appear in the text as incertae sedis in any given genus.

When a junior homonym is detected but not replaced, for any of the above reasons, its entry in the catalogue is followed by the statement “Unresolved junior primary (or secondary) homonym.”

EXCURSUS

Species-rank taxa of CREMATOGASTER, grouped by subgenus.

The subgenera of Crematogaster are arranged alphabetically below in BOLD ITALIC CAPITALS. The species currently assigned to each subgenus follow the subgeneric name in alphabetical order. Most, probably all, of the subgenera are untrustworthy and may be best abandoned. While a few of them may define reasonable species-groups others are certainly artificial, being aggregations grouped by variable, convergent, plesiomorphic or otherwise unreliable characters. It is certain that many species are misplaced in the arrangement bequeathed to us and which we are currently constrained to employ.

Species-rank taxa of DORYLUS, grouped by subgenus.

The subgenera of Dorylus are arranged alphabetically below in BOLD ITALIC CAPITALS. The species currently assigned to each subgenus follow the subgeneric name in alphabetical order. The status of the subgenera is dubious. Gotwald & Barr, 1980: 231, imply that some may be distinct and perhaps worthy of elevation to the rank of genus; but others would appear to have little or no taxonomic value. My current opinion is that the subgenera should all be synonymised, as Dorylus forms a single monophyletic group with a unique diagnosis.
